I have been reading this book at Starbucks for a real flavor of the Northwest. It is a historical journey linking man with nature while passing through a winter, water, wonder land. There are 150 pages of great photography with colorful pictures of man and animals living in the beautiful surroundings of the Inside Passage. Contrast that with the old black and white photographs, almost simulating the passing of time, as man fades from the scene leaving behind dilapidated buildings in the state of constant decay. In July I will be sailing by on a Princess cruise ship looking over the guard rails at the beautiful sights found in this book. I will notice the buildings and old shacks in the distance, but then sip my drink and look away. The author of "Along the Inside Passage" stopped, knocked on the doors of those shacks, went inside and chronicled the lives of its inhabitants. Thanks, Terry Dammel

INFORMATION OVERLOAD. I was seeking a little information (and still looking for some color) about Skagway, Juneau and Ketchikan. 'Along the Inside Passage: Stories, Pictures and Incredible Facts from Seattle and Vancouver to Skagway' by Meredith Bain Woodward filled that bill with just a little information on those spots and an overload of little pieces of information, facts and figures on almost every other site, sound, strait, passage, bay, canal, and town or village, between Seattle and Skagway. Too much.
