Justice Perverted: How The Innocence Project At Northwestern University's Medill School Of Journalism Sent An Innocent Man To Prison

Synopsis

Rick Kogan, Chicago Tribune: "Should be on the reading list of every journalism school and law school in this country." • In 1983, Anthony Porter was convicted of the brutal double murder of Marilyn Green and Jerry Hillard. While sitting in the bleachers near Chicago's Washington Park swimming pool, the victims were shot multiple times at point-blank range. Porter was sentenced to death. In 1998, within fifty hours of Porter's scheduled execution, the Illinois Supreme Court granted a stay, pending a hearing on Porter's mental competency. At this point, journalism professor David Protess and his Northwestern University Innocence Project students took up Porter's cause. Soon, Porter was released from prison, and Alstony Simon, then a Milwaukee resident, was convicted of the Washington Park homicides. But that's not the end of the story. Nor is it all of the story. Simon himself has now been exonerated and is suing Northwestern University, David Protess, and two other individuals for more than $40 million in punitive damages. This is the true story of how and why Alstony Simon replaced Anthony Porter in prison.

Anne-Marie Reynolds, Readers' Favorite: "Justice Perverted: How The Innocence Project at Northwestern University's Medill School of Journalism Sent an Innocent Man to Prison by William B Crawford is a true story. Anthony Porter was convicted of a brutal double murder in 1983. The victims were Marilyn Green and Jerry Hillard, both shot at point blank range several times while sitting in the bleachers near the swimming pool at Washington Park. Fifteen years later, in 1998, just 50 hours from the time of his execution, Antony was granted a stay, pending the results of a hearing on his mental competency. It was at this point that David Protess, a professor of Journalism, and his group of Northwestern University Innocence Project students decided to get involved with Porter's cause, effecting his subsequent release from prison. Shortly after this, a Milwaukee resident by the name of Alston Simon was convicted of the murders. Unfortunately, that is not where the story ended. Simon has since been released and cleared of all charges, and is now pursuing legal action against the Innocence Project and David Protess for more than $40 million. This is the story of how Simon came to take Porter's place in prison." "Justice Perverted by William B Crawford is a real eye opener. We all know that miscarriages of justice take place on a far too regular basis, but few of us are invited to hear the stories behind them. Thanks to William Crawford, we have been given a rare insight into how the wheels of justice turn, be they forward or backwards. Being a true crime aficionado, I was thoroughly hooked by this story. The footwork and research that has gone into it is phenomenal and it shows as the story unfolds.
